Rosser's Tribute to Custer.

The evil which men do lives after them

I am surprised and deeply mortified to see that our neighbor, the P. P. and T., in its morning issue has seen fit to adjudge the true, brave and heroic Custer so harshly as to attribute his late terrible disaster with the Sioux Indians to reckless indiscretion. From what I can gather from General Terry's instructions to General Custer it is quite evident that it was expected, if not expressed, that Custer should attack the savages wherever found, and as to the manner of attack of course that was left to the discretion and judgment of General Custer, and viewing the circumstances of this fatal attack from my standpoint. I fail to see anything very rash in the planning of it or reckless in its attempted execution. On the contrary, I feel that Custer would have succeeded had Reno, with all the reserveof seven companies, passed through and joined Custer after the first re uls . It is not safe at this distance, and in the ab sence of full details, to criticise too closely the conduct of any officer of this command, but I think it quite certain that General Custer had agreed with Reno upon a place of junction in case of the repulse of either (r both of the de tachments, and instead of an effort being made by Reno for such a junction, as soon as he enconnered heavy resistance he took refuge in the hills and abandoned Custer and his gallant comrades to their fare.

amused those Indians as soon as he reached them, or diverted their attention until General Terry could come up with reinforcements, for. although it is stated that General Terry was only twenty or thirty miles off and he moved by forced marshes, he did not reach the scene of the disaster until three days after its occurrence. The ludians were running, and it is very evident to my mind that General Terry expected them to make every possible effort to escape, and Custer was doubtless ordered to in my family for Dyspensia and Sick Headache, pursue them cut off their retreat to the south and to drive them back upon Terry and Gibbon, and thus hemmed in between these commands and thus hemmed in between these commands are remarked in any instance."—[Rev. W. F. Easterling.

they were to be crushed. To do this it was necessary for Custer to strike them wherever found, and by vigorous blows and hot pursuit be was to drive them into the trap which Terry had set for them. Infantry on expeditions against Indians can only be used as guards for supply trains, and in the of wild geese. It was expected when the ex pedition was sent out that Custer and the Seventh cavalry were to do all the fighting, and superbly did a portion of them do it. As a soldier I would sooner to day lie in the grave of General Custer and his gallant comrades alone in that distant wilderness, that when the "last trumpet" sounds I could rise to judgment from my post of duty, than to live in the place of the survivors of the siege on the hills. I knew General Custer well, have known him intimately from boyhood, and, being on opposite sides during the late war, we often met and measured strength on the fields of Virginia; and I can truly say now that I never met a more enterprising, gallant or dangerous an enemy during those four years of terrible war, or a more genial, whole-souled, chivalous gentleman and friend in peace than Major General George A. Custer. Respectfully, T. L. Rosser.
